Q: Scala - override final trait method I've got an abstract trait with a final method that I've overridden in a class that extends it. abstract trait Filter[T] { def filter(t: T): Option[T] } class FilterImpl extends Filter[Int] { override def filter(t: Int): Option[Int] = None } This works fine and as expected. However, if I have to use the method in different objects that extend the trait I get the error: Error:(29, 13) method filter in class FilterImpl cannot be accessed in class Filter How can I override that method in my concrete class so that I can use it in the new instances of the class? Note: I know how to access it in the original class, and this is not the issue. The problem is overriding the final method. A: It's just the behavior you want. The compiler doesn't allow you to override methods which are final. Notice that if you add a body to the abstract method, you will get an error saying that you shouldn't have a body in an abstract method. Q: How to combine 3 date ranges into 1 filtered list (javascript) I have 3 date ranges in 2 different lists and I want to combine them into a 4th list. And I can't get any of the solutions to work. What am I doing wrong? Here's the jsFiddle: var list1 = $('#filter_list input'), list2 = $('#filter_list input'), list3 = $('#filter_list input'); var filterList = function () { var start = list1.eq(0).val(), end = list1.eq(1).val(),
